Using training to add high tech/manufacturing jobs in California

Newport Beach, Ca. October 1, 2007 — Select University Technologies, Inc. (“SUTI”) a Newport Beach based research and development firm, which takes leading University research and launches new products based on developed technologies, has obtained a contract from the state of California’s Employment Training Panel. The funding, created through employer-paid payroll taxes, will help SUTI reach its goal of creating new technology-based business enterprises in California which create high wage, high skill jobs.

When commenting as to why the Employment Training Panel should confer the grant to SUTI, Governor Appointee Scott Gordon remarked that the SUTI business model of creating California jobs and businesses is exactly what the state looks for when allocating funds.

SUTI has already begun the training program, which will provide its workforce with basic skills through an advanced learning curriculum. The Company will deliver training that is focused on specific technologies, solid teamwork, and the disciplines of product development and commercialization.

The State contract, which was arranged through Training Funding Partners, a business consulting firm based in Tustin, will enable SUTI to provide each of the employees anywhere from 20 to 200 hours of classroom and laboratory training.
